 from several angles first the question what was understood as science through time and how it is named in different languages especially the classical ones is approached criteria for what did pass as scientific are found that point to science as a kind of greek denkstil sought why latin finally lost this lead role a third part seeks to define the peculiar characteristics of scientific latin using corpus linguistic approaches as a result several types of scientific writing can be identified the question of how to transfer science from one linguistic medium to another is never far latin inherited this role from greek and is in turn the ancestor of science done in the modern vernaculars at the end of the study the importance of latin science for modern science in english becomes evident human communication is a field of interest of enormous breadth being one which has concerned students of many different disciplines it spans the imagined gap between the arts and the sciences but it forms no unified academic subject there is no commonly accepted terminology to cover all aspects the eight articles comprising this book have been chosen to illustrate something of the diversity yet at the same time to be comprehensible to readers from different academic disciplines they cannot pretend to cover the whole field some attempt has been made to present them in an order which represents a continuity of theme though this is merely an opinion most publications of this type form the proceedings of some symposium or conference in this case however there has been no such unifying influence no collaboration no discussions the authors have been drawn from a number of different countries the first article by John Marshall and Roger Wales Great Britain concerns the pragmatic values of communication starting by considering bird song and passing to the infinitely more complex meaningful values of human language and pictures the pragmatic aspect means the usefulness what does language or bird song do for humans and birds what adaptation or survival values does it have these questions are then considered in relation to brain specialisation for representation of experience and cognition
