The Japanese had no options; the strategic planning rested with the Americans. Zeiler's gripping and thorough overview discusses other contrasts between the two foes: the Americans planned multiple advances in the Pacific Ocean and on the Asian mainland; they used a massive number of troops, devised and adopted new amphibious techniques, and deployed the new nuclear category of weapons. The Japanese stubbornly but desperately clung to their territory, often with the basest of defenses. By August 1945, the United States forces at sea, on land, and in the air had brought Japan near complete defeat. In addition, the Japanese Empire was diplomatically isolated, Japanese politics was in turmoil, the government faced rebellion, and the emperor stood on the brink of extinction, wracked by the destruction of the homeland from the air and blockade by sea. Japanese society veered near chaos, and the people peered into the abyss of an uncertain future. In the meantime, America's military had experienced such horrors at the hands of Japan that the U.S. made the difficult decision to unleash the atomic bomb despite the stark differences between the U.S. and Japan. Zeiler argues there was one aspect of the war that both sides held i
