radical changes in the design of housing in post war japan had numerous effects on the japanese people public policy toward housing provision and the effects of escalating land prices in tokyo and a few other very large cities in the country from the mid to late 1970s onward are examined but it is dwellings themselves and the slow but steady shift from a floor sitting to a chair sitting housing culture in urban and suburban parts of the country that figure most prominently in the discussion central to the book is the author s translation of an account written by kyoko sasaki an observant wife and mother about the housing she and her growing family experienced during the 1960s and subsequent chapters explore some of the issues that flow from her account chief among these are the small size and generally poor quality of the private sector housing that japanese of fairly ordinary means could afford to occupy in the early postwar years the new design initiatives undertaken at about that time by public sector housing providers and the diffusion of at least some of their initiatives to the housing sector as a whole and the adjustments that the occupants of housing had to or chose to make as the dwellings available to them as renters or as owners changed in character attention is also paid to the structural requirements of dwellings and attitudes toward dwellings of diverse types in a country prone to earthquakes

that would normally be considered unsuitable for home construction yet it is not only this sense of space but also the sensory use of materials and a feel for aesthetics skillfully combined with traditional elements that have fascinated architects outside of Japan first published in 1991 Japanese management succeeds in filling a major gap by providing a thorough account of the evolution and day to day practices of management within the Japanese firm the 14 chapters not only build the historical framework and modern cultural economic and social setting but also effectively deal with the process of management the final two chapters address some future challenges facing Japanese firms as they operate in the global business environment this comprehensive book is a must read for students of business management this insightful book showcases a range of design planning and policy responses to ageing populations and the built environment from across the rapidly changing and dynamic western Asia Pacific region its chapters demonstrate a clear and increasingly convergent preference for and promotion of ageing in place and the need for collaborative efforts to facilitate this at various scales through policy and practice
